GREAT-GRANDDAUGHTER OF BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

BREAKING THROUGH THE BONDAGE – BECOMING TRULY FREE!
Allow this living legacy, and expert on achieving excellence, and creating an extraordinary legacy, to inspire your students.

Sarah O'Neal Rush is the great-granddaughter of Booker T. Washington—former slave turned famous educator, and founder of Tuskegee University.

She credits her great-grandfather's philosophies on education, character building, and economic empowerment, for pointing the way toward true freedom, and providing her with a solid foundation toward attaining success.

Starting out as a single mother, shortly after high school she went to the community college to earn an associate of arts degree in business administration. She went on to earn a bachelor's degree in business management, and then a master's degree in professional psychology.

With her strong, but gentle spirit, she captivates audiences brilliantly, as she parallels compelling personal stories of overcoming circumstances, with stories of her great-grandfather's rising above slavery—demonstrating how ordinary people can achieve extraordinary legacies.

Audiences and clients, across socio-economic and ethnic backgrounds, not only walk away with the desire to take personal responsibility to reach higher ground, but they gain insight into how to build leadership skills upon foundations that were laid over a hundred years ago.

Overcoming tremendous obstacles, en route to personal fulfillment, she possesses a particular passion for reaching out to those desiring to improve their lives. Like her great-grandfather, her strong determination drives her success.

Sarah is a powerful presenter on empowerment, rising above obstacles, self-improvement, mental health issues, and much more.

She is a featured writer, and has appeared in print and television media highlighting her achievements and the achievements of her famous great-grandfather.
